

The tabletop role-playing game of queuing to play while you queue. In «La Queue» you will be a group of fans who queue to get the signature of a book author, a famous actress or, worst of all, an internet influencer.

CREATING YOUR CPF

Your crazy playable fan (CPF) will have four skills, each of which will distribute +3, +2, +1, and +0.

- ◉ Barditude: This is used to negotiate, charm, or trick other people in the queue.
- ◉ Wikitude: This represents your Wikipedian knowledge of what you are a fan of. It is also used to appraise items, detect counterfeits, and fake fans who just want the signature to sell.
- ◉ Ninjitute: This is used to move unseen, steal, sleight of hand, and generally anything criminal within the queue.
- ◉ Bodytude: This represents your physical abilities, such as how much you can lift or how fast you move. It also represents your resistance to cold, heat, thirst, hunger, and more.

You can also choose 2 pieces of equipment that will give you special abilities and 4 items you want signed. You are not very smart, and you have been worrying more about what you will get signed than what you will need during the long lines.

The signable items (comics, books, posters, etc.) function as a kind of life point. If you run out of signable objects, you will have to leave the queue and go home crying because you will never get that coveted signature again.

They can also be used in deals and negotiations, but remember to keep at least one to get them signed.

Finally, you have a Hopelessness counter that starts at 0 and represents how crazy and desperate you are becoming while waiting in an endless queue.

RULES

The rolls are easy. To start, they are all opposed, since you will only have to deal with the people in front of you, behind you, and the organization. The rest of the world does not exist. For you, now, only the queue exists.

Roll 1d12, add the corresponding skill, and compare it with the roll of the group you are interacting with. In the event of a tie, the other group always wins.

If your PFCs have good ideas when facing challenges that involve rolls, you can give them an advantage, which means they can roll 2d12 and keep whatever result they want. Using signable objects in rolls also gives you an advantage. The use of these objects can vary greatly, from including them as part of deals to throwing them in the air to distract people while you sneak in.

Hopelessness

If there is no other group to oppose, such as with Hunger or Heat rolls, the opposed roll will be against your Hopelessness. You will make your normal roll, and the GM will roll 1d12 and add your Hopelessness to it.

Each failed roll adds 1 point to Hopelessness, and each Pass roll subtracts 1 point. You can not have less than 0.

When Hopelessness reaches 10, you lose all hope and leave the queue. The GM may allow you to perform one last desperate act. This can range from stripping off your clothes and running naked, imitating a chicken, to distract everyone so your colleagues can sneak in, to running fast and jumping the security fence in an attempt to reach the perpetrator so they can sign your name on your chest.

EQUIPMENT

Equipment will primarily give you immunity to certain things or a +1 bonus to a skill in a special situation.

- ◉ Foldable Chair. It will provide you with rest and some comfort. Makes you immune to fatigue and sleep.
- ◉ Sleeping Bag. Perfect for spending the night warm and comfortable. Makes you immune to sleep and cold.
- ◉ Snacks and Chips. The basis of your fan diet and the only thing you thought to pick up at the supermarket on the way to the fan event. Makes you immune to hunger and can be used in deals as a signable object.
- ◉ Water Bottles and Sodas. They will keep you hydrated and when they run out, they can be used to pee inside. Makes you immune to thirst and peeing.
- ◉ Cosplay appropriate to the queue theme: It can literally be anything, from furry pajamas to complex cardboard cutouts that make you look like a Transformer. It gives you a +1 bonus to Witness when dueling and makes you immune to one thing of your choice. The immunity must be related to the cosplay; a Wookiee costume makes you immune to cold.
- ◉ Cosplay NOT appropriate for the queue theme: Like the above, but with a misguided geeky feel, like going to a Star Wars convention in Spock pajamas. It grants you immunity to any two hazards, but gives you a -1 penalty to Wikitude. As with the previous gear item, the immunity must be related to the costume.

You can use these items as an example to create your own equip items.

CREATING THE QUEUE

In "The Queue," there are no adventures, there are queues. Each queue is unique and special and has its own rules, but the prize is always the same: the signature of your idol.

To start, you need to define who will be signing and what kind of geeks will be in the queue. This includes everything from star fans, trekkies, potterheads, etc. to Sherlock Holmes readers, Trump followers, or Elvis impersonators.

Next, you must define the difficulty with a circle (also called clocks) of X wedges. 3 would be very easy, and 10 would be very difficult. Wedges can mean different things, from hours or nights of waiting to people ahead of you to even being in the top 50 of those in the queue.

When they achieve something important, check a wedge. For example, getting the group in front of them to leave can be an important milestone that requires fill a wedge.

When they cross off all the little cheeses, they will be standing in front of their beloved author, their beloved cartoonist, or about to kiss the papal ring.

The Rules of the Queue

At the start of the queue, the GM will announce the rules of the queue, which have been established by the organizers. Breaking the rules will result in the other people in the queue reporting you to the organizers, and you will have to fight them to keep your spot. Let's look at some examples of queue rules.

1. No leaving the queue. Anyone who leaves loses their spot.
2. No saving seats.
3. One signature per person.
4. No smoking, eating, or drinking in the queue.
5. The security cordon marks the line.

The important thing is that each rule can be broken with a skill. «No leaving the queue» with Ninjitude, «No eating in the queue» with Corpitude, etc. The idea is that the rules can be broken in at least one logical way.

The Order in the Line

The objective of the game is to steal the spot from those in front and defend against attempts to cut in from those behind. So your PFCs should be able to tell who is in front and behind in order to defend against one and attack the other.

If there is a signature limit, they can count how many people are in front of them in the line and how many groups they have to eliminate or cut in front of them to get their signature. They can use Wikitude to gather information about those groups.

The People in Front

These are the people you should eliminate. There are a variety of ways. You might be able to trick them into leaving, maybe you can intimidate them into leaving, or maybe you can negotiate a deal with them.

If necessary, the Hopelessness of this group will always be one point lower than the least Hopelessness of your PFC group. They are ahead, and they clearly have a few more hopes of winning.

The People Behind You

These people are your direct enemies. They want what you already have, and overcoming you will bring them closer to their coveted signature.

If necessary, the Hopelessness of this group will always be one point higher than the greatest Hopelessness of your CPF group. At the very least, they have to be a little more desperate than your CPF group.

Advance in the queue and defend your spot

The main objective of the game will be to defend against attacks from those behind and annoy those in front to either sneak in or force them to leave. Every spot gained is a step towards victory (and you will probably get a little bit of a kick out of it).

As they say, all is fair in love and war, so any tactic is good: seduction, intimidation, bribery, deception, even geeky duels in which the one who knows the most about the signature issue.

Creating Queue People

To create queue people, you must divide 6 points between the 4 skills and roll 1d8 in each column of this table to give them some personality.

Advantages will give a +2 to the roll if applicable to the situation and a +2 to the CPFs if they know it and can exploit it in some way.

If you like, give them a signable object and an item of equipment they can use, which will be the loot your CPFs can take if they defeat them.

1d10	Description	Advantage	Disadvantage
1	Uber-geek	Military training	Flat-earther, conspiracy theorist, anti-vaccine, ...
2	Mother/Father with 1d6 children in their care	Would eat anything a goat would throw up	Small bladder, can only defecate at home
3	Professional signature hunter	Backpack like Doraemon's pocket	Nothing prepared
4	Fan in a tacky cosplay	Grandma who brings you Tupperware	Deadly hangover
5	Someone exactly like one of the CPF	Friends in the organization	Nerdy stories
6	Older lady or gentleman who got in the wrong line	Stuck in time and must repeat the queue until they get their signature	Hypersensitive to light
7	Well-disguised fan	Luck of the dwarf	I am too old for this shit
8	Paid queue waiter	Dance-fighting	Ultra-brother-in-law
9	A famous male or female fan of the person signing	Inspiring look	Family events in a few hours
10	Infiltrated organizer	Camperized van	Addicts to board games, cards, etc.

Other risks in the queue

As a GM, whenever you see fit, or if you want to automate it, when the total Hopelessness of all PFCs is a multiple of 3, you can bring out one of these typical queue hazards that PFCs will have to face. The hazard can affect everyone, like heat, or a specific PFC, like a weak bladder.

- Bad Weather: It is not a single hazard. It can come in various forms, such as heat, cold, rain, etc.
- Tiredness: Hours of standing have their cost.
- Sleep: If you are going to be queuing for days, sleep is important.
- Hunger: A geek does not live on geekdom alone.
- Thirst: Hydration is the basis of beauty.
- Peeing: The canary needs its water changed.
- Shitting: A big problem if you have the shy bladder syndrome.

Remember that these dangers are not simple rolls; you will have to, for example, find something to drink if you are thirsty, and you might have to exchange a signable object for a soft drink with the people in front of you.
